Finding what people consider the best antivirus protection software can be difficult because there are so many great anti virus programs on the market today. In fact, if you include every software that claims to protect you from viruses, there are over one million programs that all accomplish the same thing!

First on the list of prospective best antivirus protection software is Kaspersky. This is a smaller anti virus program that really packs a punch. Up until a few years ago, it was largely unknown but, after many anti virus programs jacked their prices up, people started turning to Kaspersky due to its low cost and seemingly good protection. Well, they weren't disappointed. Kaspersky costs sixty dollars for a one year use package and that includes a warranty and all of the contact information regarding customer service. It runs well alongside other anti virus programs and doesn't interfere with anything else that might be running on your computer at any time.

Cloud Panda is another anti virus program that could possibly be one of the best antivirus protection software packages on the internet. Unlike Kaspersky, Cloud Panda is completely free and available for download via the company's website and other, less reputable, places as well. With scanning software that detects viruses and other invaders within minutes, Cloud Panda has earned a reputation as being one of the best free anti virus programs that you can download today.

Another great, free!, virus software that you can download off of the internet is AVG free version. Just like regular AVG, this software protects your computer from viruses, spyware and malware. It costs absolutely no money (hence, the word "free") and it works just the same as regular AVG virus software. To download it, all you have to do is go to AVG's website and click the download button. After that, your computer will be completely protected!

Over the years, there have been many programs in the antivirus category that have tried to claim to be the best anti virus for windows. Most have crashed and burned or have had the title ripped away from them by another newcomer that has the gall to claim it. Well, for the last two years, an up and coming anti virus software has held on to the title of the best anti virus for windows operating systems without losing it. That, in and of itself, is an accomplishment. That program is Kaspersky anti virus.

As a newcomer to the world of anti virus software, Kaspersky is still a great option for just about anybody. It comes in two different forms, making it ideal for any setting, as well. You can purchase the home version or the small business version. Home version provides protection for a small amount of computers (example: one to three) and it also comes at a lower price. For sixty dollars, you can expect to get great customer service and protection like no other. Should you feel the need to buy the small business version, it will set you back anywhere between three hundred and four hundred dollars. For the extra cost, you can expect to receive twenty four hour customer service, a yearlong warranty that will cover anything that might happen the software itself and antivirus security protection that is unrivaled by any other program on the market today.

There are very few other antivirus programs that can offer what Kaspersky does for such a low price. In fact, anything that has that low of a cost might not be what you want because you could possibly be sacrificing protection for a great deal. In the end, Kaspersky is truly the best antivirus for windows.
